History of Daylight Savings Time

Every year, on the first day of March, people across the world are waking up and finding having "lost" an hour. On the first day of the year, that lost hour is returned. This small change is made to take advantage of extra daylight hours. The name "Daylight Savings Time," often credited with the idea for DST, was first used in 1784. In 1784, he wrote a humorous paper in which he "discovered" that the sun started moving earlier each day. He suggested that waking up when the sun is up would save money on candles. However, this was not a serious proposal. DST was first implemented during World War I in 1916, and other countries in Europe followed suit. In 1918, President Woodrow Wilson signed the Standard Time Act, which established Daylight Savings Time in the United States. The U.S. kept the change, particularly during the war. In 1942, DST was extended to cover the entire year.

After the war in 1945, DST was discontinued. In 1966, the Uniform Time Act was passed, which established DST as a permanent part of the calendar.

The Ongoing Debate

Daylight Savings Time (DST) was established in 1918 to save money, keep people safer, and make the most of the daylight in the evening. However, the debate over DST is still going on. Some people believe that adjusting the time saves energy, while others argue that losing an hour of sleep might lead to an increase in accidents and health problems. A year messes with our 24-hour cycle our bodies follow. This can lead to all sorts of problems, such as a scheduling nightmare. While some states observe Daylight Savings Time, 2 states and 5 U.S. Territories (American Samoa, Guam, Northern Mariana Islands, Puerto Rico, and the U.S. Virgin Islands) do not. This makes organizing events and scheduling difficult. Adding to the confusion, not all states in Arizona observe DST. The Navajo Nation reservation must remember what time it is in Arizona. Around the world do not observe DST. Countries like Turkey, Russia, and China no longer do because of the hassle of changing the clock.
