Corporeality: Emergent Consciousness within its

Spatial Dimensions Maya Nanitchkova Öztürk,2014-05-01 Corporeality Emergent consciousness within its spatial dimensions develops our understanding of what we can experience through our bodies in relation to the space around us Rather than considering architecture as being about manifestation and mediation of fixed meanings the book focuses instead on architectural space as a field that envelopes us incessantly intimately and affectively We are in immediate contact with that space and the way we relate to it determines how we are able to grasp the realities of the social and material worlds around us This enquiry considers architectural space and its impact on and relation to us from a range of disciplines and perspectives leading from space to sense and to sensibility The theatre becomes a central point of reference on this journey allowing us to understand how space works by linking concrete spatial conditions to corresponding forms of experience It allows showing how the ways we feel think and act emerge from within the rich texture of the pre-conscious and non-contemplative That texture is induced and nourished by our bodily encounters with space Offering a view of how immediate experience is generated in the body this book enhances empirical research into the links between space body experience and consciousness Maya Nanitchkova Öztürk is Associate Professor in Theory and Criticism of Architecture Her academic interests and publications focus on space body relationships and experience of space place as grounds for developing analytical methodologies and interdisciplinary links in discourse and teaching She works at Bilkent University Ankara Faculty of Art Design and Architecture Department of Interior Architecture and Environmental Design She is on the editorial boards of ISI journal Space and Culture and the web journal Consciousness Literature and the Arts
