Abstract

[illegible]

These results are depicted in Figure 2. As shown, until the third year of life, the children in the early intervention group ($n = 21$) in the community, as compared with a waiting (control) group, showed the best language development. In the fourth year of life, the children in the early intervention group began to show a decline in language skills, and by the fifth year of life, the children in the early intervention group were no longer significantly different from the children in the waiting (control) group. The results of the analysis of the children in the early intervention group are shown in Figure 3. The children in the early intervention group showed a significant improvement in language skills from the first year of life to the third year of life, but this improvement was not maintained in the fourth and fifth years of life. The children in the waiting (control) group showed no significant improvement in language skills from the first year of life to the third year of life, but they showed a significant improvement in language skills from the third year of life to the fifth year of life.
